

Are you up to your boots in manure?
Does erosion have you slipping?
Are you stuck in the mud?
Do animal pests have you running?
Are weeds overwhelming your property?
Do other resource concerns have you stumped?

We can help!

Mission Resource Conservation District can help you address resource concerns on your equestrian or residential property. This FREE service is available to anyone in the San Luis Rey Watershed. A certified conservation planner will meet with you on your property to discuss any concerns you may have and help you address these concerns by providing detailed Best Management Practices, maps, and expert advice. This is a free service designed to help equestrian and residential property owners and managers minimize resource concerns on their property.

Call to schedule your appointment today—space is limited!

Residential and Equestrian Property Outreach Program Project Area - The San Luis Rey Watershed

The San Luis Rey Watershed encompasses several unincorporated areas of San Diego County including Bonsall, Warner Springs, and most of Fallbrook (the middle and southern portions) and Valley Center (the middle and northern portions). If you own or manage residential, equestrian or residential/equestrian property in the San Luis Rey watershed and are interested in learning about how to manage your property's resources and control any resource concerns, please contact Bethany Principe for a FREE Conservation Plan for your property. If you are unsure if your property is in the San Luis Rey watershed, Bethany will be happy to tell you in which watershed your property is located.
